

Corporate world

The Loyola Institute of Vocational Education organized a two-day workshop on Interpersonal Skills between 10th and 11th August 2017 from 9:00am to 5.00 pm.

The workshop brought together a total of 35 participants which included the PG Diploma students of Human Resource Management and Logistics & Supply Chain Management faculty members and senior mentors. The workshop was handled by a team of eminent resource persons and soft skills trainers from reputed backgrounds. The workshop provided a platform for interactive atmosphere between the resource person and the participants.

The workshop began with some theoretical input sessions to help the participants brush their knowledge on communication and why it is important in corporate world. The students were divided into groups from the second session and given various activities. At end of each activity, the students were asked to reflect their experience of that activity and resource person gave inputs from their experience.

The students were asked to do a group presentation before the final session. The feedback about each student was given by the resource person during the final session. Mr. Joel, a student of Human Resource Management, said the workshop had given opportunity for each and every student to participate. It was full of activity based session; therefore, the students had actively participated, said Ms. Irine from Logistics & Supply Chain.

The resource persons were Prof. T. Eugene, former Professor & Head, Department of Economics, Loyola College and Mr. E.L Praveen Kirubakaran, soft skills trainer.
